Methodology

Patrick E. Gonzales graduated from the University of Baltimore in 1981 with a degree in political science. He is the former president of Mason-Dixon Campaign Polling and Gonzales/Arscott Research & Communications, Inc.

Over the past two decades, Mr. Gonzales has polled and analyzed hundreds of elections in Maryland. Additionally, he and his associates have conducted numerous market research projects and crafted message development programs for businesses and organizations throughout the state.

This survey was conducted by Gonzales Research & Marketing Strategies from October 17th through October 21st, 2005. A total of 815 registered voters in Maryland who vote regularly were interviewed by telephone. A cross-section of interviews was conducted in each jurisdiction within the state to reflect general election voting patterns.

The margin for error, according to customary statistical standards, is no more than plus or minus 3.5 percentage points. There is a 95 percent probability that the “true” figures would fall within this range if the entire survey universe were sampled. The margin for error is higher for any demographic subgroup, such as gender or party affiliation.

Summary

When asked what issue will be uppermost in their mind when they decide how to vote next year, 30% of Marylanders said health care, 27% said education, 16% said taxes and budget, and 11% said crime and drugs. Other issues queried received single-digit mention.

Voters were next asked the following: “Fiscal experts say that Maryland state government will suffer from a long-range budget deficit for at least the next few years. But next year they project a temporary surplus of about 600 million dollars. Tell me which of the following options is the best way to use next year’s 600 million dollar surplus?”

Thirty-four percent want to use the money to build and repair schools, 21% said to use the surplus for tax cuts, 18% said to restore some of the 1.25 billion dollars lawmakers cut from the budget over the past three years, 16% said to set the money aside for future deficit reduction, and 8% said the surplus should be used for transit and roads.

Message Testing

Respondents were read a series of statement and asked whether they strongly agreed, somewhat agreed, somewhat disagreed, or strongly agreed with each. The results in descending order of agreement level.

STATEMENT: “Maryland’s schools are overcrowded, many are dilapidated, and too many students are forced to learn in temporary trailer classrooms. We should use most of the surplus to build and repair schools.”

Agree	76%
Disagree	18%

STATEMENT: “During the last several years, lawmakers dealt with persistent fiscal gaps by making deep budget cuts, especially in health care for the poor, child care, after school programs, and universities. Maryland should use most of the surplus to replenish the erosion to these programs and services.”

Agree	71%
Disagree	19%

STATEMENT: “It is becoming tougher and tougher for middle-class Marylanders to afford to buy or even rent homes in the communities where they work. Maryland should use most of the surplus to create affordable housing for firefighters, teachers, police officers and others priced out of the skyrocketing real estate market.”

Agree	71%
Disagree	22%

STATEMENT: “Many public services – especially for children and families -- actually prevent long-term costs. We should use most of the surplus to invest now in prevention services such as drug treatment and youth programs so that in the future we do not have to pay more for things like juvenile detention, foster care and incarceration.”

Agree	60%
Disagree	29%

STATEMENT: “Tax-and-spend liberal Democrats in Annapolis have been overspending for years. Now that there is finally a budget surplus, lawmakers should give taxpayers long overdue tax relief.”

Agree	55%
Disagree	37%

STATEMENT: “Budget experts agree that the surplus is temporary and that big deficits will return after next year. We should set aside most of this year’s temporary surplus to pay down future deficits.”

Agree	51%
Disagree	39%
